

The urban dynamics in a large city from the developed is quite different from those evident in Christ Church.

The urban dynamics in Christchurch are limited there is a lot of people living there but not enough sources to provide, access to telephones, income from government benefit, employment, higher income level, benefits for single parent families, better qualifications, level of housing ownership, better living space.

Christchurch although populated does not have enough resources to be able to provide employment and housing to those people.

The urban dynamics in a large city in the developed world deals more with urbanisation and counterurbanisation they can provide both housing, jobs and financial support to those people. But because the cities are so big sometimes they blend together so as to be able to provide plenty of jobs.

By comparing both the urban dynamics of Christchurch and a large city in the developed world you can see that a lot of people living in one city is only good if they can be provided with housing, jobs and financial support.
