

The role of world cities today are very important to the economy and trade of modern day society and if they didn't function properly within a global network, the world would not be alright.

World Cities play a major part in things like economies, comparisons, imports and exports and ties with other countries.

These factors alone make world cities such an important part in the way many countries function and how they deal with certain things happening around the globe.

Some world cities include: Tokyo-Japan, New York-U.S.A, London-Britain, Paris-France and Sydney-Australia. These are major players when it comes to the factors above and they are all networked to operate with each other to help other countries out.

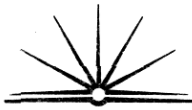

The economy is one major priority for World Cities to account for as with the markets all around the world, stocks can go up or down at the drop of a hat and everybody needs to know, especially if it is a transnational comparison that every country needs to know about.

Trade is another important factor as imports and exports are essential to a country's economy and growth + development.

The network has to help countries that are in need of a certain product or food supplies.

Corporations play a big role in the functioning of world cities, as they employ thousands of people from all over the world and provide lots of opportunities for people.

These corporations are essential for a modern day society to work.

In conclusion, world cities are needed on an essential scale as they provide for many of the things that other countries do not have and in this comes the global networks which provide the backbone for these world cities to communicate and function.
