ii) Performance enhancing drugs are considered unethical in many ways. The main reason is that they give individuals an unfair advantage over oppositions as they have an increase in their physical health. ~~Another reason why they are considered unethical is that they give athletes an unfair advantage over their opponents. This is because they can use drugs to improve their performance, which gives them an unfair advantage over their opponents. This is why they are considered unethical.~~
They are considered unethical as it decreases supporters. Fans may be drawn away from their team or sport if drug-cheats are identified. A further reason why is that it can decrease an athlete's motivation. An athlete may be able to simply take drugs rather than work hard, which creates unhealthy competition. A final reason why is that performance enhancing drugs can reduce a sports popularity and increase suspiciousness. This is due to new people rejecting the sport and people becoming overly obsessive with drug testing.
