

Start here.

A belief system is not necessarily ~~are~~ a religion. Buddhism for example is not a religion, just simply a belief system. Society has a different way of interpreting these roles if they are not socially & culturally aware/literate.

Society have many outlooks on belief systems. Some people have a religion and some do not under many circumstances. This can sometimes make people wonder why they have nothing to idolise or a super natural being to believe in. This, however, is an individual's choice.

Belief, in society, has a different effect on everyone. Some religions believe in God, yet some believe in another being. Many different belief systems do not have a super natural being to look up to. Instead they have people in the form of "power" to seek help, advice and guidance from.

Some individuals in society have no outlook on any belief system or religion. ~~that is~~ They have a different ideology than the rest of society who do have something to look up to.

The role of ideology and belief in society is really only there for the safety of something having control. Some people idolise their leaders, when others idolise their heroes. There is always going to be a conflict between the believers and the non-believers. This is just the way society is.

Ideology in society is also another safety net. It gives society something else to believe in or look up to if they have their doubts about the super-natural.

Belief, on the other hand, is completely and totally different to ideology. Belief is something strong. Belief is how we turn into ourselves. If it wasn't for believing in something, our society would be empty and full of followers, instead of the strong people we are today.

Buddhism, we know is a belief system and not a religion. Their beliefs have been ~~the~~ globalised across the world as one of the most followed belief systems in the world.

Additional writing space on back page.

Without belief systems like this and religions such as, Christianity, ~~the~~ ~~see~~ one of the biggest religions, society may find themselves lost due to not having the ideology & beliefs.

You may ask for an extra Writing Booklet if you need more space.