Question Part

One significant practice within Judaism is Marriage. Marriage is the central unit in any Jewish tradition, Marriage represents the love and care between a couple. Their mutual respect for one another is seen as a form of love and commitment. A family is considered highly applicable to any Jewish marriage as it is viewed as the ~~main form~~ main form of pro-creation. In the idea of a divorce a contract must be signed called a 'get', ~~which~~ although a sad idea, it is still looked into and acted positively on. Genesis quotes "Be fruitful, and multiply". A companion is needed in order to create a family within a marriage.

Question Part

The contribution of Jewish Feminism has been a strong and successful impact within Judaism. Jewish Feminism is the idea of ~~is~~ a woman's voice being heard in social, religious and everyday life. Jewish women are asking to be ordained as female rabbis. They ask society where they stand within society. Their voices are merely heard and their ideas are looked over, in an attempt to be the voice for women.

~~But~~ Blu Greenberg and Jacqueline Nishit account for their voices to be heard, as they speak up for all the silent women and stand up for what they believe in so strongly for.

Question Part

Jewish Feminism has had a successful and major impact towards Jewish society. Its impact has been viewed upon all around and is a source of 'voice' for silenced Jewish women. Jewish Orthodox biblical scholars such as Blv Greenburg and Jacqueline Nino make-up and account for these voices. They raise questions regarding the inequality between women + men. Questions such as why can't women become rabbis? Why can't men + women pray together? and social factors also. Models of Divinity are also acted upon, where images of God are being viewed as masculine + manly, therefore raising questions as to the conflicting topic of gender roles. Its impact has been seen via the "Jewish Orthodox Feminist Alliance," which is the alliance whereby these strong willed women provide a voice to be heard. Also the Jewish magazine 'LILITH' provides answers that Jewish women seek within their society. The Torah is the main form of biblical worship where one can seek true answers and ideas from. Therefore the impact on Judaism in regards to Jewish Feminism has been effective and positive!
