

Qn 3.

From the early stages of art through to today, art has changed because time has changed. Painting from life or outside has changed to a simple photograph.

Architecture is still around but very old but is either remodelled to a modern design or added on to keep the old look for history's sake.

Techniques of art such as repetition (Andy Warhole) in the 1960's was a form of art - also in Comre Steps with bright colours. Today, we are influenced by these artists techniques and we use them in a more modern way. Not only by screen printing but by using figures/materials. Artists then may have had plenty of time on their hands to paint all day - something from life. Today, time is something we lack and that's why the time changes and newer technologies are brought in to capture life figures or anything.

Salvador Dali - as a surreal artist, was influenced by an unrealistic ~~theory~~ theme. The stopping of time.

He painted melting clocks in a surreal environment / background.
